

CUTTING GRASS

by
Hal Ames

Juan did not know what to do. He was confused. It was obvious that he had made a big mistake. He just stood looking down at the lawnmower. He realized that it was broken beyond repair.

One week before, Juan and Manuel had made plans to go from house to house to ask if they could cut their grass.

Manuel and Juan talked about their plans to make some money. The school had planned a trip to the capital city and they would need extra money for their meals. They wrote down everything in a notebook. They found out they would need to cut thirty lawns to earn enough money for the school trip. If they got ten customers, and they cut each lawn three times, they would have enough money.

The boys got excited. They had found a way to make money for the school trip.

Manuel had a computer at his house. The boys made flyers to pass out to all of the houses on their street. After they counted the houses on their street, they printed thirty flyers. Manuel saved the file on his computer so they could print more later.

They used red and blue ink, and added a picture of a lawnmower. They put a red border around the edge of the paper. How could anyone resist?

The flyers said:

Two Boys Mowing Service
Juan Hernandez and Manuel Santiago
We will mow your lawn for you! Just call 555 -2345

They cut the papers in half and took a flyer to each house. They put them into the mailboxes. It took about two hours for them to pass out all of the flyers.

After they passed out the flyers, they met at Manuel's house. They waited for the phone to ring. Nothing happened. They were disappointed that no one called for their grass cutting business.

Juan and Manuel printed more flyers. They folded the new flyers, and then they went to more houses on the other streets. It took longer this time because they had to go farther away.

When they arrived at Manuel's house, they asked his mother if there had been any phone calls for them. The answer was no.

The boys spent the night at Manuel's house. They stayed close to the phone, just in case someone called. No one called.

The next morning the boys thought and thought about how they could get business. They came up with a new plan. They would go door to door and knock on each of them. They would tell the homeowners about what a wonderful job they would do for them.

It was Saturday so they knew most of the people would be home.

They started at the house next to Manuel's. Mr. Juarez was in his yard. He was already cutting his grass. The boys asked him if they could cut his grass. He said he was happy to cut his own grass, but if he had a problem, he would call them.

This happened house after house. Everyone was doing his or her own yard.

They knocked on every door they came to.

Later, on another street, an old woman answered the door.

She said, "Hello,. What can I do for you boys?"

They told her about the flyer. They asked her if they could cut her grass for her.

To their surprise, she said yes! She would let them cut her grass. If they did a good job, she would let them cut her grass every week. The boys had their first customer.

The nice old woman said she had a lawnmower in her garage. They were welcome to use it. The boys ran to the garage. Inside they found a beautiful red lawnmower. Next to it was a can of gasoline. They filled the gas tank. Since Juan had watched his father start their lawnmower, he knew how to do it. This one was just like it.

Juan pulled on the cord. Nothing happened. He pulled it again. Still nothing. Manuel checked the gasoline. This time when Juan pulled the cord the engine started. The boys got excited.

They looked at each other. Who was going to start cutting the grass? Juan said he would. He had helped his father cut their grass before. He pushed the lawnmower out of the garage.

He started in the front. He made straight lines. He went back and forth across the yard. It looked beautiful.

All of a sudden, the lawnmower made a loud noise and then stopped. The boys looked at each other.

“What now?” they thought aloud.

When they looked to see what had happened, they found a piece of metal in the ground. When the lawnmower had gone over it, the lawnmower stopped. Now the lawnmower was not going to work. They would have to pay to fix the lawnmower. They did not have the money for that. They got scared.

Just then, the old woman came out of her house. She asked, “What happened?”

The boys showed her the problem. They showed her the metal in the ground.

“Oh my,” she said. “I had new windows put on my house. The installers asked me if they could put a sign in my yard. When they took the sign away, they must have left this here. I’m going to call them and ask them to replace my lawnmower!”

Before she went inside her house, she turned and said, “You boys have done a great job. I'll tell all of my neighbors to hire you. When I get a new lawnmower come back and finish the job, OK?"

The boys said yes, and then ran home. They were happy to know that they had done nothing wrong. They would not have to buy a new lawnmower. They had their first customer!
